Wellbeing Health & Youth Engagement Framework

Health research and services do not routinely collaborate with young people. Here is a framework to help integrate ethical engagement. We can transform teenage health together.

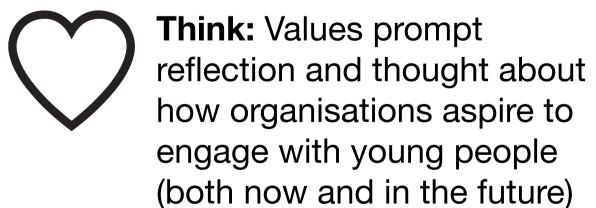

Producing a common language and meaningful technologies Actively engaging with all stakeholders to ensure the language used, activities planned and technologies created are easy to understand, easy to join in with, and make young people feel safe, comfortable and welcome.

Embedding a shared, intergenerational responsibility Developing collaborative processes that give stakeholders a sense of mutual ownership and shared responsibility, and genuine opportunities to contribute and feedback.

Co-designing projects, systems and services Entering into engagement and collaboration with an open mind and understanding that young people's insights may test your thinking, challenge your assumptions and shift your goals.

Explore: Questions spark discussion to identify existing engagement with young people alongside gaps where there might be room for improvement

Apply: Ethical practices demonstrate an organisation's ongoing commitment to the proposed values – by integrating new ideas, and adapting to the diverse needs and changing

Use the WH&Y Engagement Framework and get in touch so we can learn, share and collaborate. To download a full version of the WH&Y Engagement Framework, and to find out more about the WH&Y mission and team, go to why.org.au.

Recommended citation for this infographic: Swist, T., Collin, P., Nguyen, B., Steinbeck, K., & Dawson, A. (2019). Wellbeing Health & Youth Engagement Framework. WH&Y Centre of Research Excellence, Australia. Retrievable from why.org.au/engagementframework.

ustralian Govern

National Health and Medical Research Counci